

The Online Project partners with Sawari Ventures to bring TechWadi to Amman

April 28, 2010

(Modern Media, LTD - Amman) As part of its continued support for promoting the regional digital economy, The Online Project partnered with Sawari Ventures to host TechWadi's Global Technology Forum in Amman on April 28, 2010.

TechWadi, the US based Arab American professional technology association for entrepreneurship startups took place in Washington DC, where a group of 100 high-level executives, investors, and policymakers gathered. Surprise speakers included Craig Newmark, founder of Craigslist, and Dr. Naif Al-Mutawa, creator of "The 99" - a revolutionary comic book and television series translated into 8 languages and read by President Obama himself.

At the Amman event, also sponsored by The Queen Rania Center for Entrepreneurship, DART, El Hassan Science City, Aramex, Endeavor Jordan, Meydan and Start Alliance, Jordanian entrepreneurs, business people and thought leaders came together to participate and engage live with the attendees and panelists.

Energizing discussions on entrepreneurship, venture capital, and new initiatives to accelerate the growth of the Arabic Digital Economy took place at the satellite event.

###

Additional Links:

The Online Project's website: www.TheOnlineProject.me

TechWadi GTF: www.techwadi.org